In Memory of Freud

Comity In Memory of Freud for a larger and a better gratitude towards the work of the father of psychoanalysis.

Registering Freud's works in the "Memory of the World" program of the UNESCO matches with at least two Freudian lessons: a structural one and a contextual one.

1. The first one establishes that the subject is responsible for her desires and for her behaviour. She gets to choose. In consequence, uniting the singular and the universal is possible, but not to recognize a general feature. This union shows the most shared human fault, for which  $\text{Œdipe}$  is a famous illustration. The one and only unquestionable equality between humans is the one of the fundamentally incestuous tendency to objectivise.
2. The desire is able to separate from the religions and the ideologies. Our current societies are directly concerned. Freud's theory has been misunderstood and has served for the satisfaction of private and selfish goals. But incorporating his work within the UNESCO patrimony might preserve and offer it the opportunity to deliver better effects.
